Long before explorers came to the Pacific Northwest, the Snoqualmie Tribe, or People of the Moon, settled in the area to partake in the abundant resources: salmon, wildlife, and vegetation that rely on the river. The river later attracted European settlers, who used it as a transport system for timber, and then, once cleared used its fertile soils to farm and provide food for the surrounding communities. The Snoqualmie Valley Trail parallels the river and occupies the historic path of a spur line of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad. Today, the river connects the Valley communities, sustains its farms, provides aesthetic value and recreational opportunities, and is filled with salmon and other fish species.
